Alfred Hertz got the lion's share of the applause, and he deserved it. He gave the orchestra too free a rein, to the overpowering of the singers, as he often does; but he reached superb climaxes. The funeral march really awed and thrilled. To this man's unflagging seal and devotion the thanks of all hovers of Wagner are due. Happily, he is re-engaged for next season.

Leffier-Burckhard's Brunnhilde was by far the best thing she has done here. Hers was no inspired impersonation such as on rare occasions we have been permitted to see, but it was characterized by lofty intelligence and fine dramatic fervor. Even if her singing left something to be desired it was expressive and full of feeling.

Burgstaller's voice is not yet restored to its proper quality, but his Siegfried filled the eye, Louise Homer was an effective Waitraute, and Gutrune is one of the best things Marion Weed does. Alfred Hertz got the lion's share of confessional.

Mr. Conried has abdicated as king. While he may flatter himself that he made opera pay, he cannot be unmindful of his many artistic promises un-fulfilled. He never tried to be popu-lar. His alcofness and arrogance communicated itself to his subordinates, and the administration just ended never endeared itself to the opera going pub-Hc-at least, not outside of the subscription. But it must be remembered to Mr. Conried's credit that he gave us "Parsifal" and "Salome" (both works of transcendent ability, superbly mounted and excellently performed) The latter was withdrawn after on performance, not, as has been intimated in print more than once this last season, because the power and effectiveness of the composition were not recognized, or because of the lascivlousness and immorality of the story, but because of the horror engendered by the principal incident that allke outraged gensibilities, taste and artistic pro-So farewell, Mr. Conried, and good luck!

"An Easter Dewn," which Victor Herbert composed for The Evening World three years ago to words by Glen Mac-Donough, was a feature of the Victor Herbert concert at the Broadway Theetre last night, It was sung by Elisa-Dodge. There was a large audithat enjoyed the regular programme, applauded generously and insisted upon a lot of extra popular numbers by the orchestra, all of Mr. Herbert's own works. Offenbach, Dvorak, Moskowsky Lassen and Ponchielli were also represented, and Miss Dodge, by request, sang Gounod's "Ave Maria," with violin obligato by John M. Spar-

The herd made its way to Madison Square Garden, where the Wild West is to open to-morrow evening. One of the buffalos attempted to get away but a cowboy fired a blank cartridge near his nostrils and restrained him. All day "Johnny" Baker was busy getting the scenery into place for the avalanche and the prairie fire. One hundred men with him were working in shifts from early morning until late at night and until the opening night of the show there will not be a moment's rost in the Garden.
The Indians arrived snortly after the circus left. Chief Iron Tail, head chief of the Indians, was welcomed by many old friends. As he smoked the pipe of peace he smiled as one man after another came up to the place where he was sitting to say "How?"
